about Koh Sichang

Koh Sichang is an island located in the Gulf of Thailand, 12 km. from the western shore of Sriracha district, Chonburi province, surrounded by other islands. A big island, 25.61 sq.km of total area, there has been a local village community here for over 100 years. Many remarkable historic sights, beautiful natural areas, places of worship, facilities such as a harbour, a school, a hospital, and a variety of accommodation and government offices are located nearby. Koh Khang Khao and Koh Tai Taa Muen are located to the south of Koh Sichang, important places for ecological research on coral reefs in the Gulf of Thailand. The other surrounding islands are located to the east of Koh Sichang.

Koh Sichang, located distinctly in the inner gulf which connects to the Gulf of Thailand and the open sea, represents a well-known arrival and departure route from the open sea to Thailand for foreign trade and is still a principal transport route, as well as a mooring and a shelter from the storm.

In the past, King Rama IV, V and King Rama VI came to the island to relax. King Rama V initiated the construction of the first palace as a royal summer home. The palace was named "Phra Chudadhut Palace" after his son who was born on this island.
